INTRODUCTION

The American Booksellers Association (“ABA”)’s Motion to Intervene should be denied because it is procedurally and substantively deficient. Contrary to Ninth Circuit caselaw, ABA seeks to inject new issues and arguments that diverge from and contradict those in the Complaint, leaving Amazon to respond to inconsistent arguments. For example, ABA claims Amazon’s prices are too low; Plaintiffs claim Amazon’s featuring of competitive prices in its store allegedly causes higher prices in Amazon’s store and elsewhere. ABA claims brick-and-mortar and online bookstores are part of the relevant market; Plaintiffs claim that the relevant market excludes brick-and-mortar stores and consists only of a handful of online “superstores,” such as Walmart.com and Target.com. ABA’s claims are premised on the Robinson-Patman Act; Plaintiffs bring no such claims. Rule 24 intervention is not intended to allow the addition of such unrelated and contradictory legal theories.

There are separate and independent procedural defects to ABA’s Motion. It is not accompanied by a proposed pleading that provides notice of its claims, as required by Rule 24, and is untimely because it was filed seven months after Plaintiffs’ Complaint, and after the deadline for joining additional parties.

The Court should deny ABA’s Motion to Intervene.<sup>1</sup>

BACKGROUND

On September 26, 2023, Plaintiffs filed their Complaint.<sup>2</sup> Since then, Amazon filed a motion to dismiss the Complaint, which is fully briefed. The Court has considered the parties’ submissions and entered a Case Scheduling Order that set March 14, 2024 as the deadline for joining additional parties. Discovery is well underway and document production is expected to be substantially completed in the coming months.

1 ABA is an association of independent bookstores that mainly sell through brick-and-mortar
 2 stores, although some operate online bookstores. ABA's public statements indicate that its 3 members are thriving, contrary to its claims here that "Amazon has stifled . . . competition by ABA
 4 members." Mot. 2.<sup>3</sup>

5 ABA asserts that it has closely tracked this action, Mot. 9 n.10, but it waited seven months 6 to file its Motion to Intervene. This is not the first time that ABA has advanced claims against 7 Amazon of the type discussed in its Motion. In November 2022, ABA met with the FTC "to 8 discuss Amazon's anticompetitive behavior in the book industry," and in 2023, submitted a white
 9 paper describing that alleged behavior.<sup>4</sup> ABA urged the FTC to bring a Robinson-Patman Act 10 claim based on Amazon's charging lower prices than ABA's members. Mot. 9 n.10. ABA claims 11 that Amazon's prices are so low that ABA members cannot match those prices "except by forgoing 12 a sustainable margin, or incurring a loss, given the higher wholesale prices concurrently paid by 13 ABA members for the same books." Mot. 2. Notably, one ABA seller attempted, unsuccessfully, 14 to bring these types of claims in a putative class-action lawsuit against Amazon and several book 15 publishers. The federal court dismissed that case with prejudice after two years of litigation, and 16 the plaintiff elected not to appeal.<sup>5</sup>

17 In this case, the FTC declined to pursue ABA's legal theory. The Complaint does not 18 allege a Robinson-Patman Act claim, does not allege that Amazon offers lower prices than other 19 booksellers, and does not allege that ABA booksellers are within the relevant market. Indeed, the than 20 years." <https://apnews.com/article/independent-bookstores-membership-growth-66678667daa1e0529ffe6ad9c7273459> (visited May 23, 2024).

3 ARGUMENT

4 ABA’s untimely motion is procedurally deficient because it fails to attach a pleading from 5 which the Court could evaluate the relationship between ABA’s proposed claims and the 6 Complaint’s allegations. Moreover, ABA fails to satisfy the requirements for Rule 24(a) 7 intervention as of right or Rule 24(b) permissive intervention.

8 I. ABA’s Motion Should Be Denied Because It Is Procedurally Defective.

9 As discussed below, ABA’s Motion asserts legal theories that contradict those in the 10 Complaint and have no place in this action. But, as a threshold matter, the Court should deny 11 ABA’s Motion because it is procedurally deficient.

12 A. ABA’s Motion Does Not Comply With Rule 24(c) Because It Fails to Include 13 a Proposed Pleading.

14 ABA’s Motion is not “accompanied by a pleading that sets out the claim or defense for 15 which intervention is sought,” as required by Rule 24(c). ABA argues that the Ninth Circuit 16 considers this only to be a technical requirement. Mot. 3 n.4. But the requirement is “technical”
 17 only in that non-compliance will not waive a would-be intervenor’s substantive rights. The Ninth 18 Circuit has not held that Rule 24(c)’s requirement can simply be ignored. See Cal. Dep’t of Toxic 19 Substances Control v. Jim Dobbas, Inc., 54 F.4th 1078, 1086 n.7 (9th Cir. 2022) (although failure 20 to submit pleading in District Court was a technical defect, pleading is still required and failure to 21 include pleading should be corrected on remand). Courts in this Circuit regularly deny intervention
 22 motions when the movant fails to comply with Rule 24(c), and otherwise fails to offer a sufficient 23 basis for how the movant’s claims relate to the pending claims. See Buffin v. City & Cnty. of San 24 Francisco, 2016 WL 6025486, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 14, 2016); Raines v. Seattle School Dist. No.

25
 26 <sup>6</sup> All citations to “Compl.” are to Plaintiffs’ Amended Complaint.

1 I, 2009 WL 3444865, at *1 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 23, 2009); Schudel v. Searchguy.com, Inc., 2009
 2 WL 10671749, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 4, 2009); Peak Asphalt, LLC v. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. of Harford, 3 2008 WL 5429730, at *1 (D. Idaho Dec. 31, 2008).

4 Westchester Fire Insurance Company v. Mendez, 585 F.3d 1183 (9th Cir. 2009), which 5 ABA cites, Mot. 3 n.4, does not validate ABA's failure to attach a pleading. Westchester excused 6 the failure to attach a pleading only when "the court was otherwise apprised of the grounds for the 7 motion" or "the intervenor [was] content to stand on the pleading an existing party has filed." Id.
 8 This would be the case when the intervenor's allegations are "'identical'" to those in the pending
 9 complaint. Westchester, 585 F.3d at 1188 (quoting 7C Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & 10 Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1914 (3d ed. 2009)). When, as here, the 11 proposed intervenor's "interest is not so obvious," failure to attach a pleading is not excused.
 12 Ironshore Indem. Inc. v. Kay, 2022 WL 293230, at *6 (D. Nev. Feb. 1, 2022).

13 ABA admittedly does not advance interests or theories identical to those in the Complaint.
 14 Plaintiffs' Complaint does not focus on the retail book issues of interest to ABA. Mot. 2. For 15 example, the Complaint contains no allegations related to Amazon's wholesale contracts with 16 publishers. ABA's core legal theory, that Amazon's prices are so low that its members cannot 17 effectively compete, contradicts the premise of Plaintiffs' claims, that Amazon's featuring of 18 competitive prices in its store allegedly causes prices to be too high. And ABA's claims center on 19 competition between Amazon and brick-and-mortar booksellers, which are not within the relevant 20 market alleged in the Complaint. ABA also admits that, in light of those facts, it would need to 21 pursue its own discovery and remedy. See Mot. 5-6. In sum, ABA's legal theories are wholly 22 absent from, and contradict, Plaintiffs' theories. ABA's failure to attach a pleading alone is ground
 23 to deny ABA's Motion.

24 B. ABA's Motion to Intervene Is Untimely.

25 ABA seeks to intervene seven months after Plaintiffs filed the Complaint and more than a 26 month after the deadline to join additional parties. Case Scheduling Order, ECF 159 (Feb. 13, 2024). Plaintiffs’ legal theories have not changed since this case was filed. ABA’s assertion that it needed months to “review relevant case law” and consider whether the Complaint reflected its interests, Mot. 13 n.12, is implausible. ABA engaged in a lengthy campaign against Amazon, submitted a white paper to the FTC, and “[i]n the months leading up to the filing of the Complaint,” made “presentations to the FTC outlining ABA’s interest therein” that focused on a Robinson-Patman Act claim. Mot. 9 n.10. ABA knew of the claims and allegations described in its Motion well before this case was ever filed. ABA’s untimeliness alone is a ground to deny its Motion. See FTC v. Cardiff, 2020 WL 766336, at *4, *7 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2020) (intervention untimely when party waited two months after protected interest arose). As discussed below, ABA’s untimeliness also means that ABA cannot meet the standards for either intervention as of right or permissive intervention.

II. ABA Does Not Meet the Standard for Intervention as of Right.

Even aside from the Motion’s procedural defects, intervention is improper. ABA’s claims, which center on Amazon setting prices too low and on brick-and-mortar bookstores’ competition with Amazon, are legally and factually at odds with Plaintiffs’ claims.

To intervene as of right under Rule 24(a), ABA “must show that: (1) it has a significant protectable interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action; (2) the disposition of the action may, as a practical matter, impair or impede the applicant’s ability to protect its interest; (3) the application is timely; and (4) the existing parties may not adequately represent the applicant’s interest.” Donnelly v. Glickman, 159 F.3d 405, 409 (9th Cir. 1998) (internal quotation omitted). “Failure to satisfy any one of the requirements is fatal to the application.” Perry v. Proposition 8 Off. Proponents, 587 F.3d 947, 950 (9th Cir. 2009). ABA fails to satisfy all four requirements.

First, ABA does not have a “significant protectable interest relating to” this action. “An applicant generally satisfies the ‘relationship’ requirement only if the resolution of the plaintiff’s claims actually will affect the applicant.” Donnelly, 159 F.3d at 410. An “undifferentiated,

1 generalized interest in the outcome of an ongoing action is too porous a foundation on which to 2 premise intervention as of right.” S. Cal. Edison Co. v. Lynch, 307 F.3d 794, 803 (9th Cir. 2002)
 3 (internal quotation omitted). And an intervenor cannot cure its lack of a protectable interest by 4 “inject[ing] new, unrelated issues into the pending litigation.” Arakaki v. Cayetano, 324 F.3d
 5 1078, 1086 (9th Cir. 2003).

6 ABA cannot meet this requirement. ABA’s central claim is that Amazon obtains books 7 from wholesale suppliers at lower prices than ABA members, which enables “Amazon to sell
 8 books to retail customers at prices that ABA members cannot match except by forgoing a 9 sustainable margin.” Mot. 2. In other words, ABA argues that its members cannot compete 10 because Amazon charges consumers lower prices. That contradicts Plaintiffs’ claims, which allege 11 that Amazon practices result in higher prices. Indeed, the Complaint’s only substantive reference 12 to Amazon’s book business claims that “Amazon has raised some book prices.” Mot. 2 (citing 13 Compl. ¶ 423).

14 ABA also asserts a relevant market that differs from the two markets alleged in the 15 Complaint. The Complaint alleges first, an “Online Superstores” market that excludes “brick-and-16 mortar stores and online stores with a more limited selection.” Compl. ¶ 124. And second, the 17 Complaint alleges a market for “online marketplace services,” which the Complaint claims is 18 comprised of marketplaces that offer particular services to third-party sellers. Compl. ¶ 188.
 19 ABA’s members include both brick-and-mortar booksellers and online booksellers, which ABA
 20 claims directly compete with Amazon. See Mot. 2, 3, 5, 6. ABA explicitly faults the Complaint 21 for failing to “focus on Amazon’s use of its monopoly power to restrain competition in the sale of 22 books to consumers.” Mot. 2. But the Complaint’s failure to do so results from Plaintiffs’ choice
 23 to allege an artificial market that excludes both brick-and-mortar retailers and all online stores
 24 other than Walmart, Target, and eBay. See Compl. ¶¶ 124, 126-161. Plaintiffs’ purported “online 25 marketplace services” market further emphasizes the mismatch here. Plaintiffs focus on Amazon’s 26 practices with respect to third-party sellers in Amazon’s Store. In contrast, ABA complains about Amazon's wholesale purchasing and Amazon's first-party retail practices allegedly disadvantaging ABA's members' sales through their own brick-and mortar and online bookstores.

In addition, ABA's claims focus on Robinson-Patman Act theories, see Mot. 4, rather than the FTC Act or Sherman Act claims alleged in the Complaint. ABA tried to convince the FTC to include such claims in this case: "In the months leading up to the filing of the Complaint in the present case, ABA made presentations to the FTC . . . focused on a Robinson-Patman Act claim against Amazon." Mot. 9 n.10. Plaintiffs chose not to include these claims, and ABA cannot now force the issue by intervening and alleging inconsistent theories. See BP W. Coast Prods., LLC v. Shalabi, 2012 WL 12881914, at *2 (W.D. Wash. Feb. 23, 2012) ("That Intervenor's have similar claims that they might like to bring is not sufficient to satisfy Rule 24(a).").

Second, the disposition of this action will not "impair or impede" ABA's "ability to protect its interest." Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). ABA's claim is premised on a legal theory based on the Robinson-Patman Act that was not alleged by Plaintiffs. See Mot. 3-4. And ABA seeks a remedy specific to Amazon's books business, "requiring Amazon to convert its online retail book business to a third-party retail platform such as Amazon's Marketplace." Mot. 6.<sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs have not specified the relief that they seek, but there is no indication from the Complaint that it would be focused on the retail book market. Even if ABA's proposed relief were similar to equitable relief sought by Plaintiffs, "an applicant's mere desire to obtain similar relief is insufficient, by itself, to necessitate intervention." Donnelly, 159 F.3d at 411.<sup>8</sup>

Third, ABA's Motion is untimely. "Timeliness is the threshold requirement for intervention as of right," League of United Latin Am. Citizens v. Wilson, 131 F.3d 1297, 1302 (9th

<sup>7</sup> ABA does not specify on what legal ground the Court could order Amazon to cease operating as a first-party seller of books. Any such order would be anti-competitive in its own right.

<sup>8</sup> ABA does not explain why only intervention would preserve ABA's rights. See United States v. City of Los Angeles, 288 F.3d 391, 402 (9th Cir. 2002) ("doubtful" that movants' interests were impaired by litigation that did not "prevent any individual from [separately] initiating suit"); Akina v. Hawaii, 835 F.3d 1003, 1012 (9th Cir. 2016). And any claimed "inconvenience" or supposed judicial economy considerations are not enough to mandate intervention as of right." Koepke v. Becton, Dickinson and Co., 74 F.3d 1246 (Table), at *2 (9th Cir. 1996); (citing Blake v. Pallan, 554 F.2d 947, 954 (9th Cir. 1977)).

1 Cir. 1997), and if untimely, there is no need to “reach any of the remaining elements of Rule 24.” 2 Id. “In determining whether a motion for intervention is timely, [courts] consider three factors:
 3 (1) the stage of the proceeding at which an applicant seeks to intervene; (2) the prejudice to other
 4 parties; and (3) the reason for and length of the delay.” Id. “A party seeking to intervene must act
 5 as soon as he knows or has reason to know that his interests might be adversely affected by the 6 outcome of the litigation.” United States v. Oregon, 913 F.2d 576, 589 (9th Cir. 1990).

7 ABA offers no justification for its delay in seeking to intervene. ABA admits that before
 8 the Complaint was filed, it made a presentation to the FTC urging a Robinson-Patman theory and 9 “outlining ABA’s interest” in this action. Mot. 9 n.10. Adding legal theories at this stage of the 10 proceeding would be prejudicial and disruptive; as only one example, the parties have already fully 11 briefed a motion to dismiss in this case. ABA would also raise new factual issues, such as 12 Amazon’s contracts with publishers, that it concedes would require discovery that Plaintiffs have 13 not sought. Mot. 5. Amazon, too, would require additional discovery, including of ABA’s 2,500
 14 member booksellers, Mot. 1, concerning, inter alia, the alleged impact of Amazon’s pricing on 15 those members. Discovery in this case is already well underway: Amazon is already in the process
 16 of responding to more than 300 requests for production. The parties also have already negotiated
 17 and filed multiple motions on procedural issues, such as scheduling, a protective order, deposition
 18 limits and procedures, and ESI protocols. Adding a new party would require the parties to revisit 19 and duplicate the effort already spent resolving those issues and hinder continued progress in 20 litigating this action.

21 Finally, if ABA is right that its “interest in this case is fully consistent with Plaintiffs’ 22 Complaint,” Mot. 5, Plaintiffs are capable of representing that interest. Indeed, there is “an 23 assumption of adequacy when the government is acting on behalf of a constituency that it 24 represents.” Arakaki, 324 F.3d at 1086; see also Oakland Bulk & Oversized Terminal, LLC v.
 25 Oakland, 960 F.3d 603, 620 (9th Cir. 2020) (denying intervention when “intervenors failed to offer 26 persuasive evidence . . . that [government’s] broader interests would lead it to stake out an undesirable legal position”). It is insufficient that ABA claims to “support[] Plaintiffs’ claims.”

 Mot. 3. ABA has not made any showing that Plaintiffs’ representation will be inadequate such that ABA needs to intervene. See Puget Soundkeeper All. v. EPA, 314 F.R.D. 516, 520-21 (W.D.
 Wash. 2016) (representation adequate when EPA represented interests of general public while movant represented “narrower economic and other interests of its members”).<sup>9</sup>

III. ABA Does Not Meet the Standard for Permissive Intervention.

ABA likewise fails to show it qualifies for permissive intervention. “An applicant who seeks permissive intervention must prove that it meets three threshold requirements: (1) it shares a common question of law or fact with the main action; (2) its motion is timely; and (3) the court has an independent basis for jurisdiction over the applicant’s claims.” Donnelly, 159 F.3d at 412.
 Even “if an applicant satisfies those threshold requirements, the district court has discretion to deny permissive intervention.” Id. The court must also “consider whether intervention will unduly delay the main action or will unfairly prejudice the existing parties.” Id.

First, ABA’s claims do not share common questions of law or fact with this case. “The intervention rule is . . . not intended to allow the creation of whole new lawsuits by the intervenors.”
S. Cal. Edison Co., 307 F.3d at 804. “[O]pening the door to” ABA’s “additional contentions would only serve to confuse the matters at issue in the complaint and to delay the proceedings unnecessarily.” Sierra Club v. EPA, 2013 WL 5568253, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 9, 2013). Because the “inclusion of” ABA’s “additional claims and relief would necessitate the consideration of extraneous legal and factual issues that [Plaintiffs’] lawsuit would not otherwise invoke,”

<sup>9</sup> The cases that ABA cites in which courts permitted intervention, Mot. 9-13, involved markedly different circumstances. See, e.g., Cascade Nat. Gas Corp. v. El Paso Nat. Gas Co., 386 U.S. 129, 136 (1967) (government representation inadequate under pre-1966 Rule 24 because it flouted prior Supreme Court mandate); Western Watersheds Project v. Haaland, 22 F.4th 828, 841-42 (9th Cir. 2022) (proposed intervenor had right to seek specific remedy that existing plaintiffs could not pursue); Sw. Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Berg, 268 F.3d 810, 823 (9th Cir.
 2001) (existing defendant admitted it would not “represent proposed intervenors’ interests”); *Cal. ex rel. Lockyer v.
 United States*, 450 F.3d 436, 442 (9th Cir. 2006) (disposition of case could result in prosecution of intervenors for failing to provide emergency abortion services); Washington v. EPA, 2020 WL 1955554, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 23, 2020) (allowing intervention to assert arguments and rebuttals that the government lacked sufficient information to assert).

1 intervention here is unwarranted. Apple Inc. v. Iancu, 2021 WL 411157, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 5, 2 2021).

3 Second, the motion is untimely for the reasons identified previously. Supra at 4-5, 8; see
4 Cardiff, 2020 WL 766336, at *7 (intervenor untimely for mandatory intervention also untimely 5 for permissive intervention).

6 Finally, intervention will unfairly prejudice Amazon. ABA seeks to bring theories based 7 on Amazon’s retail book business, which is not otherwise a focus of Plaintiffs’ Complaint. ABA
8 concedes that it would need additional “discovery related to Amazon’s contracts with book 9 publishers.” Mot. 5. And Amazon would require discovery of ABA and its members. This is 10 prejudicial when Amazon has already begun responding to extensive discovery from Plaintiffs, 11 including through electronic discovery and custodial document productions. Amazon should not 12 be required to start a whole new discovery effort regarding a different business unit at this stage 13 of the case.

14 IV. ABA Should Not Be Accorded Amicus Curiae Status.

15 Amicus curiae status is traditionally granted to parties for the purposes of stating their 16 views on a particular legal issue or motion. See Hooks v. Starbucks Corp., 2023 WL 7092047, at 17 *5 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 26, 2023) (permitting amicus curiae to file brief regarding pending motion 18 but explaining amicus could not “file additional memoranda or participate in oral argument unless 19 authorized in advance by the Court”). It is not properly used, as ABA proposes, as an alternate 20 form of intervention in a case for all purposes, by a party that otherwise does not meet the 21 intervention standards of Rule 24. If ABA wishes to submit an amicus curiae brief at an 22 appropriate time, it may move the Court to do so.

23 CONCLUSION

24 For the foregoing reasons, the Court should deny ABA’s Motion to Intervene.
